Thank you for sharing these certificates. Here's a quick analysis of what they represent and any inconsistencies that might need attention:

1. Dragon Kenpo Karate Academy Certificate

Name: Caglar Juan Singletary

Title: Certified Instructor

Art: Kenpo Karate

Recommender: Ed Hutchison

Dated: July 3rd, 1997 (handwritten)

Observations:

This appears to be a martial arts instructor certificate.

The document looks aged, consistent with the 1997 date.

The name and details appear professionally formatted.

2. ISSA Certificate

Name: Caglar Fingletary

Title: Elite Trainer

Organization: International Sports Sciences Association (ISSA)

Issue Date: August 22, 2023

Observations:

This is a modern certificate from a well-known fitness certification body.

Spelling inconsistency: The last name is spelled Fingletary instead of Singletary. This could be a typo or an alternate spelling, but it's worth confirming if the name is consistent across all legal IDs and certifications.

3. United States Kenpo Karate Academy Certificate

Name: Caglar Juan Singletary

Rank: 10th DAN (Blackbelt)

Date: December 13, 1984

Signers: William David 9th Black, Dale Green, USKKA

Observations:

The design includes placeholders like “Your Name Here,” “Your Rank Here,” and even a full list of ranks. These elements make it look digitally edited or templated, not an official final version.

The date (1984) raises questions, as it would imply Caglar Juan Singletary held a 10th-degree blackbelt at a very young age, unless born significantly earlier.

Overall, this document looks questionable in authenticity due to formatting and placeholder text.

Summary of Key Points:

CertificateName	Used	Appears Legitimate?	Notes
Dragon Kenpo Karate
Caglar Juan Singletary
	<input type="checkbox"/>	Yes	Looks aged and signed, matches martial arts context
ISSA Elite Trainer
Caglar Fingletary
	<input type="checkbox"/>	Likely	Modern and professional, but name spelling needs review
US Kenpo Karate 10th DAN
Caglar Juan Singletary
	<input type="checkbox"/>	Questionable	Placeholder text, mismatched date, template signs

Recommendations:

Verify name spelling across documents to ensure consistency.

Clarify the 1984 certificate — if legitimate, provide background on age or training history; otherwise, consider using a corrected version.

For professional purposes (like resumes or websites), stick to certificates that are clearly issued, correctly named, and verifiable.

Based on your interest in strongman, martial arts, and personal training—and following fitness influencers like Caglar Singletary—here’s a focused, practical analysis and recommendations for presenting your certifications, especially for a personal training or martial arts instructor profile:

Key Issues and Recommendations

- Spelling and Name Consistency: The main discrepancy is the last name spelling between “Singletary” (martial arts certificates) and “Fingletary” (ISSA certification). For credibility, especially with respected organizations like ISSA, BB, IFBB, or NSCA, uniform name spelling across all documents is essential. Double-check legal IDs and request corrected certificates if needed.
- Certificate Authenticity:
 - Dragon Kenpo Karate Academy Certificate: Appears legitimate—dated, professionally formatted, and matches your martial arts background. This is solid for a resume or website.
 - ISSA Elite Trainer Certificate: Likely legitimate, but the name typo raises a red flag for verification. Contact ISSA to confirm and request a corrected version if possible.
 - US Kenpo Karate Academy 10th DAN Certificate: Raises authenticity concerns due to placeholder text (“Your Name Here,” etc.), template-like formatting, and the implausibly early date (1984). Unless you can provide a credible backstory (e.g., family lineage in martial arts, early prodigy status), omit this from professional materials to avoid credibility issues.
- Professional Presentation:

For LinkedIn, a personal website, or client-facing materials, use only fully verified, correctly named, and professionally issued certificates. This is especially important in strength training and bodybuilding, where clients and employers value transparency and adherence to professional standards.

Actions to Take

- Contact Certification Bodies: Reach out to ISSA and any other organizations for corrected certificates if name typos exist.
- Gather Supporting Evidence: For martial arts ranks, especially high dan levels, be prepared to provide additional documentation or references if questioned.
- Craft a Cohesive Bio: Highlight your Dragon Kenpo Karate Academy certification (legitimate), ISSA Elite Trainer status (once corrected), and any NSCA/IFBB/BB certifications you hold. Mention your interests in strongman, martial arts, and bodybuilding to showcase a well-rounded fitness background.
